E. W. Howe, the famous Kansas editor, is writing some mighty interesting travel notes for his monthly steamer talks on booze and business

"A young Englishman who sits at our table tells a terrible story of business. He says that in Johannesburg, South Africa, where he lives, he is often compelled to take thirty drinks a day, or lose trade. I would like to tell him what I think of the statement, but do not care to start a row on board. Any man who says he trade, tells a silly falsehood. A drinking man usually admires a man who doesn't drink. The men who have been most successful in business have not been noted as boozers. But elderly Englishman did.
